

Readings for Writers, 2001, 775 pages, Jo Ray McCuen, Anthony C. Winkler, 0155074806, 9780155074804, Harcourt College Publishers, 2001

Features One hundred twenty readings include poems, newspaper columns, diary entries, formal arguments, student essays, instructional texts, literary descriptions, personal letters, memoirs, speeches, and short stories. Selections are grouped under a unique labeling system that show how each reading is meant to be used: Advice, Discussion, Example, and Issues for Critical Thinking and Debate. The Student Corner, found at the end of each chapter, includes both first and final drafts of a student essay as well as a writing tip from that student writer. Each Issue for Critical Thinking and Debate contains a related graphic, intended to get students thinking. Pedagogy for each selection includes vocabulary and writing suggestions, plus questions that ask students to consider the facts, strategies and issues. Each chapter ends with three types of writing assignments: general assignments; Writing Assignments for a Specific Audience; and Collaborative Writing Project. Three full-length student papers, illustrating both the MLA and APA styles of documentation as well as the literary essay, are included. New to the Tenth Edition Twenty-three new readings include the works of instantly recognizable writers such as Oscar Wilde and Maya Angelou, as well as those by lesser-known voices such as Judy Mann and Gerald Larue. Four of the Issues for Critical Thinking and Debate are new and explore teen violence, family values, the existence of God, a
